WHAT WE MAY GROW

infinitely more complex than any engineer. The factors to his success are to a far greater extent beyond his control, because he works with living plants and animals, in their relation to climate and soil. It would therefore seem almost an axiom that the farmer should understand his soil, his plants and animals, their physical and chemical construction, life history, physiology and diseases.

Hawaii is an old settled country. Its agriculture is older than that of the prairie region of the United States, a region containing over thirteen million inhabitants and now the population center of the United States. The center of population is coming this way at a rapid pace, and the next twenty years is going to witness a marked increase in the foreign population of these islands. There is going to be development along new lines. With ocean steamers in your harbors and the cable at your door, new capital and new enterprises will embark for your shores. There is going to be an increase in the number of American farmers as well as business and professional men in Hawaii. What inducements to settlement have you to offer? The cane lands have been well exploited and cane growing will probably always be one of the leading industries of Hawaii. But what are you going to plant for the world's markets on the lands back of the sugar belt?

The Agricultural Department in Washington has just issued a report giving the value of farm products exported and imported during 1901. During that year foreign nations purchased farm products from the American farmer to the value of $2,000,000, an increase of $100,000,000 over 1900. There was at the same time a decrease of twenty-eight million dollars in the amount paid for foreign agricultural products. But we paid $355,000,000 for sugar, coffee, hides and skins, silk, vegetable fibers, fruits and nuts, tobacco, wool, tea, wine and cocoa, vegetable oils, seeds, spirits, vegetables and spices.

In opening up new land and new lines of agriculture in Hawaii we stand at an advantage with the rest of the tropics in that many of the products of tropical lands are protected by duties. This is the case with silk, vegetable oils, spirits, tobacco, tea, seeds, fibers, spices, fruits and nuts. In a word, with almost all of the items on the list excepting coffee.

The duty on raw silk is $3.00 a pound. Silk culture was successful in Hawaii during the period from 1845 to 1865. The industry died because of the duty imposed upon the product in the American market. But now that Hawaii is a part of the United States, the duty is in your favor. The silk industry in China, Japan and Italy, the three countries that produce the world's supply of the raw article, is a home industry. The caring for the silk worms is the work of women and children, leaving the men free to work in the fields or in the factory. The silk industry if it could be developed in Hawaii, would do much toward settling the problem of labor for the plantations, and if we go to Italy instead of Japan or China for our skilled colonies to form a nucleus of the industry we also secure men who will grow up into good and thrifty citizens. By all means keep in mind that duty of $3.00 a pound on raw silk.

Fibers.—Cotton is the world's great staple vegetable fiber. Cotton has been grown in Hawaii. During the period from 1862 to 1873 the annual exports of cotton from Hawaii were quite considerable. Cotton is a cash crop. It may not be very profitable, but it is worth considering. Our exports to Japan and China of both cotton and cotton manufactures are on the increase, and it would seem that the difference in freights in favor of Hawaii as against New Orleans might yield a small margin of profit alone.

Sisal and abaca or Manila hemp are both protected articles. We know that sisal can be grown at a profit on the dry side of Oahu, and there are very considerable stretches of dry and rocky land on this island that might be planted in sisal hemp. Yucatan is the richest State in Mexico, and Yucatan's sole crop is sisal fiber. Abaca is a banana and grows like other bananas. In the Philippines the abaca industry is considered a highly profitable one. It may, I believe, become one here as well, especially on the Kau and Kona side of the island. Incidentally, a very excellent fiber is obtainable from the trunks of the bananas that you are growing for export, and this fiber is sometimes sold as genuine Manila hemp. And I believe that this fiber can be extracted by machinery. It is worth looking into as a by-product in your fruit industry.

Tobacco.—Tobacco of very fair quality has been grown in Hawaii. I noticed in the Advertiser last week a shipment of a few bales of tobacco to Honolulu from Kona on the Mauna Loa. The consumption of tobacco in Hawaii is very large. There is a duty of $2.00 a pound on Sumatra or pepper leaf tobacco and a heavy duty on Havana and other fillers and smoking tobaccos.

The annual imports of wrapper leaf tobacco into the United States amount to 40,000 bales, worth ten million dollars. I know from an experiment that I have already made at Honolulu that we can grow Sumatra wrappers in Hawaii of silky, elastic texture and good color. There is money to be made in tobacco in Hawaii in the right district. Tea.—Tea grows well right here in Hilo and in Oahu. If we can grow and make a tea which has a flavor and aroma distinctly its own, i. e., if we can grow a tea which is Hawaiian rather than Ceylon, Japanese or Chinese in type, there is a chance for the development of a tea industry. But we cannot compete with other tea growing countries if our tea is like theirs. Oils.—The world's demand for vegetable oils is constantly increasing. The castor bean is now worth in the neighborhood of $60 a ton, and there is a growing demand for both beans and oil in the United States. The castor bean is one of the big money crops of India, the annual exports from that country amounting to more than $25,000,000. Yet you in Hawaii are protected from the competition of India by a duty of 25 cents a bushel on the beans and 25 cents a gallon on the oil. Dr. Smith concluded his lecture with promising statements in regard to the prospect for rubber, tamarinds, vegetables, poultry and the growth of seeds of various kinds for export. He dealt with the efforts and work of the experimental station and urged the formation of Farmers' Institutes similar to the one in Honolulu, in all the country districts.

Her Troubles Over.

Notice of satisfaction was filed yesterday in the United States District Court in the two remaining cases against the schooner Frank W. Howe, and late in the afternoon an order releasing the vessel from attachment was issued by Judge Estee. The first case, instituted by Hall and Wood, was decided in favor of the plaintiffs. The other cases were settled out of court.
